UDon't Need It? Student Move-Out Program Begins May 20

Newark, DE (May 6, 2013) – The University of Delaware and the City of Newark have joined forces once again to offer the seventh consecutive year of the “UDon't Need It?” student move-out program on Paper Mill Road at the former Curtis Paper Mill site. Co-chair Deb McCredie, Assistant University Secretary shares that “while the program was originally developed to take control of the overwhelming amount of household goods disposed of each spring by departing university students, it has matured into a charitable event as well. A large amount of the captured furnishings and home goods are put into the hands of people who need them.” The program will start accepting student deliveries on May 20 and sales of items that remain after the program fills the many needs of local charities are slated to begin on Tuesday, May 28.

Former co-coordinator Carol Houck, now Newark's City Manager, says, “We have been very successful at reducing the amount of re-usable items that end up in the landfill and with our work with the charitable organizations. This program exemplifies the great work Newark and the University can do together for the good of the overall community.”

Partnering and supporting organizations include The Food Bank of Delaware, Better World Books, the Delaware Solid Waste Authority, and Clean Harbors.

Details about the program including hours of operation are available on the Newark's website at www.cityofnewarkde.us/UDNI.
